About the Authors

Joseph L. Brockington, PhD, (1951–2015), served as associate provost for international programs at Kalamazoo College. During his 35-year-long career at Kalamazoo, Brockington served in several roles in the Center for International Programs before being named associate provost in 2000. He was recognized internationally as a safety and risk management expert in study abroad programming. During his career, he served in various positions at NAFSA, including chair of the Section on U.S. Students Abroad (SECUSSA) and member of the International Education Leadership Knowledge Committee.

Inés DeRomaña is director of international health, safety, and emergency response, and the Title IX liaison at the University of California System Education Abroad Program (UCEAP). DeRomaña is responsible for strategic and operational leadership on matters of health, safety, and emergency response. She develops and reviews practical, effective, and vetted health and safety standards, policies, strategies, plans, best practices, and guidelines for UCEAP. DeRomaña monitors and assesses changing security, safety, health, and natural threats, and stays current on regional and country political issues that may affect UCEAP operations abroad. She is in charge of risk assessment/risk management as part of the University of California Enterprise Risk Management (ERM). She is a 24/7 first-responder during student- and program-specific emergencies overseas and responsible for emergency management. DeRomaña is a national trainer and presenter on mental health issues, students with disabilities, risk and crisis management, alcohol abuse, study abroad liability, and chronic health issues for the University of California System, NAFSA, Mobility International, and for OSAC-U.S. Diplomatic Security Safety Seminars for Academia.

Julie Anne Friend is the director of the Office of Global Safety and Security at Northwestern University, where she is charged with developing a comprehensive, institution-wide approach to education abroad risk management. She has chaired the NAFSA Education Abroad Knowledge Community (EA KC) Health and Safety Subcommittee and is one of two higher education representatives appointed to the U.S. Department of State’s Overseas Security Advisory Council Executive Board. She writes regularly for NAFSA’s International Educator magazine on topics related to risk and insurance. Friend has a JD in law and an MA in English from Michigan State University as well as a BS in speech communication from Syracuse University. She is a licensed attorney in the state of Michigan.

Joanna Holvey-Bowles has nearly 30 years of experience in the field of education abroad. She spent her junior year abroad at the University of East Anglia, holds a BA from Emory University in history, and an MS in global and international education from Drexel University. Active in both NAFSA and The Forum on Education Abroad, Holvey-Bowles is published in the areas of health and safety, crisis response, mental health, and insurance protocols. She has led countless sessions, workshops, and trainings in health, safety, and crisis management. She served the field as chair of the NAFSA Education Abroad Knowledge Community (EA KC) Health and Safety Subcommittee. While she has spent more than 28 years working for study abroad provider organizations, she now serves as director of off-campus study at Colgate University.
Patricia C. Martin is the director of off-campus study at Swarthmore College. As director, she sets the strategy for faculty members and students planning off-campus opportunities and ensuring the health, safety, and security of students in study-abroad programs. Martin has served as dean, chair, and presenter of NAFSA’s Core Education Program workshop on Health, Safety, and Risk Management in Education Abroad, chair of the Interassociational Advisory Committee on Health and Safety, and is a former national education abroad chair. Martin was twice elected to The Forum on Education Abroad’s Advisory Council. She presents frequently on education abroad issues at regional and national conferences, and has contributed to publications for NAFSA and the Academy for Educational Development. She coedited the third edition of NAFSA’s Guide to Education Abroad for Advisers and Administrators. Martin holds an MA in international administration from the School for International Training (SIT).

Stacey Bolton Tsantir is director of health and safety at DIS–Study Abroad in Scandinavia, a nonprofit study abroad organization with locations in Copenhagen and Stockholm, where she is responsible for risk assessment, crisis planning, incident response, insurance, legal matters, and training of stakeholders. She has chaired the NAFSA Education Abroad Knowledge Community (EA KC) Health and Safety Subcommittee, served on the Interassociational Advisory Committee on Health and Safety, and various Forum on Education Abroad committees and working groups. Tsantir has a JD, an MA in education policy and administration, and a BS in Communications and Journalism.